Introduction

MARINKA, before 2014, was known in Ukraine due to location in its territory of Laktis dairy, tire repairing plant, and a food and flavor factory. Situated on the Osykova River, the town adjoins western outskirts of Donetsk and is the capital of the same-name Marinka District. For 9,829 residents², there were 2 secondary schools³, A. S. Makarenko boarding school #3, and the Golden Key kindergarten. Close to the town, there is Donetsk – Zaporizhzhia territorial highway.

However, Marinka became most well-known as a result of the events of 2014/15. Then, practically at the same time as the power was seized by the Kremlin-led forces in Donetsk, Marinka appeared in sight of illegal armed formations. From the tactical point of view, the town is a stronghold for further invading Kurakhove settlement and opens a direct way to Zaporizhzhia, Mariupol and other cities located alongside the Azov Sea⁴. The many-thousand population has practically been living in the line of fire all this time.

In 2015, after the signature of the Minsk agreements, Marinka turned out to be in the grey zone which adversely affected the destiny of the town and its residents. At the end of the year, when the checking point (hereinafter, the “CP”) was made some kilometers further from Marinka, the town ultimately became controlled by the Ukrainian authorities.

How It All Began

While the illegal armed formations seized administrative buildings and there were heard appeals from platforms, calling for declaration of autonomy, Marinka's residents anxiously observed all the developments.

The town authorities had been aloof; there had been no official statements, though the national flag was removed from a flagpole. In her article 'Marinka: Ukrainian town with divided loyalties', the BBC News' Sarah Rainsford wrote: "Local officials - who do not want to be quoted directly - describe how masked men came to visit one evening, carrying the Russia's flag. After some discussion, they were allowed to raise the tricolour above the building but now it has gone⁷. This information is confirmed by the social network postings: "It is sad and disgusting. Yesterday (April 14, 2014 - editor's remark), the Russia's flag was ran up over yet another district center of Donetsk oblast (Marinka)⁸. The author of the message continued that illegal armed groups had been allowed in the police station without striking a blow and even shown that there had been no weapons in the room for their storage. Thus, there has been no forced seizure of the administrative buildings in the town.

In the spring 2014, the local inhabitants differed in opinion as to further developments: some of them supported the idea of autonomy, while the others advocated unitary state. However, the majority strived for peaceful resolution of all the matters. Such a broad range of opinions resulted in controversial steps: at the meetings taking place in the town, the supporters of the self-proclaimed republics called to support referendum and, in the meantime, the painted yellow and blue stripes began to appear of the lampposts. Anxiety was spreading throughout the town – people were afraid of the worst, the war⁹.

The preparations for the referendum received passive resistance in Marinka. The activists, who supported the idea that Marinka should join the so-called DPR, called to intensify public outreach efforts in the town since the head of the district administration – Roman Ivanovych Havrin – “double crossed” the referendum¹⁰ and was preparing the town for holding the presidential elections. In order to prevent the manifestations of political activity of the local residents, the representatives of the illegal armed formations took preventive measures on their part. For example, on May 24, the militants broke into the house, destroyed the documents and took hostage Valentyn Poliakov, head of territorial committee #60¹¹. It was already in the night following the closure of the constituency election commission and, in fact, the election disruption¹², that the hostage was let go.

In the second half of May 2014, the situation inside and around Marinka became even more serious. Mass media and social networking sites informed, from time to time, about checkpoints of illegal armed formations that appeared at the entries to Marinka¹³, and troops and weapons pulled in the town boundaries. The pressures had been mounting: shops, drugstores, post office¹⁴ and banks’ branches began to close¹⁵.

Marinka in the Thick of Action

In June 2014, contrary to the Ukrainian President's plans for peaceful settlement of the situation in eastern oblasts of Ukraine¹⁶, there were signs of preparations, by the illegal armed formations' members, for the assault of the sites of the ATO forces dislocation. Concentrations of the militants and military equipment had been detected in a number of inhabited localities including Marinka¹⁷. As a result, on June 30, the Ukrainian President canceled the unilateral ceasefire. As a response to regular shelling by illegal armed formations and their step-by-step movement inland, it was declared that Ukrainian forces resume their advance in Donetsk and Luhansk oblasts¹⁸. A full-scale military operation of the Ukrainian Armed Forces for the counter-attack along the whole delimitation line began early in the morning on July 1, 2014¹⁹. Closer to 11:00 hours, Ukrainian mass media informed about a "several-hour tank battle between the ATO forces and Kremlin-led armed forces that took place in the townships of Karlivka and Marinka"²⁰. Kirovskyi district of Donetsk oblast was shelled from the side of the latter²¹. The checkpoints of the Ukrainian Armed Forces and representatives of the self-proclaimed DPR were located at a small distance from each other. The situation in the town remained to be stable.

While Marinka's residents were braced for an inevitable escalation of the situation, the leaders of the so-called DPR made an effort to take 54 children from the Marinka boarding school to the Russian Federation.

"On July 11, armed people led by Olena Korovkina, deputy social policy minister of the DPR, muscled in on the Marinka orphan boarding school"²². The intruders, having taken a director and his deputy for pedagogical work, left the institution's premises. Later on, it came to be known that the boarding school's director was threatened and demanded to sign the documents permitting transfer of the boarders to the Russian Federation. Their demands having been refused, the armed people came back in the night and made a violent attempt to take children in unknown direction. The boarding school authorities were able to convince the so-called DPR's representatives to transfer children to Donetsk boarding school #1²³.

According to the Human Rights Ombudsman in the Verkhovna Rada (Parliament) of Ukraine Valeriya Lutkovska, this situation had been saved by the order of Serhii Taruta, head of the oblast state administration, which provided that he was the only person authorized to sign the documents concerning any transfer of children²⁴ – it was not the first attempt to take orphaned children outside the State of Ukraine²⁵.

A boarding school in Marinka before the commencement of the hostilities

Shortly thereafter, notwithstanding the threats of the illegal armed groups, the local Donetsk authorities successfully arranged a safe evacuation of children outside the ATO zone. In late July, 34 boarders of Marinka boarding school were sent to Holubok health center in Sviatohirsk²⁶.

Concurrently with the mentioned events, a breaking point was reached in Marinka in the night from July 11 to 12: an illusory peace changed to military operations. The town was shelled by militants from Grad systems. Andrii Havrysh, Secretary of Marinka town council: "All first [shells] fell on Zavodska Street – these were blocks of flats. [Then] On dairy; ... tire repairing plant, [and] cars burned down then. All fell along the southern part. People were shocked. They left the town in the night, using any available vehicle, and even running on foot. Nobody understood what was going on." In the video posted on YouTube by local residents, it is possible to see the overwhelming scales of the destruction²⁷. In the partially destroyed town, there had been registered instances of marauding. Civilians either took refuge in the basements or rushed to leave their houses²⁸. On July 12, 2014, Andrii Lysenko, spokesperson of the Information and Analytical Center of the National Security and Defense Council, noted that there were people who remained under the ruins however, Russia-led forces interfered in the rescue mission without ceasing fire²⁹. According to the information of the UHHRU's Center for Documentation, at least 6 civilians perished on July 11 when Marinka was shelled³⁰.

On July 15, the militants took a district police station and hung out their flag on it. From then onward, there had been armed hostilities, detonating blasts, shelling, and an increasing number of the damaged houses, private facilities, and public institutions.

In the last month of the summer, Marinka was burning not because of the burning sun, but because of the full-scale combat operations. The situation escalated in August as a result of massive invasion by the military groups of the Russian Federation's Armed Forces^{31 32 33}. Ukrainian troops started counterattacking Donetsk and the first priority task of the Ukrainian Armed Forces was to liberate Marinka from the Kremlin-supported illegal armed groups.

The checkpoints of illegal armed formations were destroyed in the first days of August. Retreating, the militants gained a foothold in the area of Trudivska mine, where the situation was active³⁴. The fire of artillery and multiple launch rocket system was brought down on the town. On August 4, Azov and Shakhtarsk battalions forced the militants out of their positions and the next day Marinka was fully liberated. It was devastated, ruined, and in complete uncertainty. Several times a day the soldiers conducted raids along the streets, but the town remained under control of neither the Ukrainian Armed Forces nor the militants, with battles continuing in its outskirts.

The Battles for the Town in the Summer 2015

In September 2014, the 28th separate mechanized brigade (28 SMBr) headed by Commander Vladyslav Lishchynskyi was ordered to take up the first line of defense in the direction: Pisky – Neveselske – Krasnohorivka – Marinka – Pobieda – Slavne – Taramchuk – Berezove – Olhynka³⁵. Marinka remained to be the hottest flashpoint area in the theater of operations at the time of announcement of the Minsk agreements (January 2015). At the time when the representatives of the parties to the conflict together with the OSCE representative and the Russian ambassador were signing the agreement in Minsk, the sound of shelling did not stop in Marinka³⁶. Even the ceasefire, promised according to the terms of truce, did not last long.

According to Dmytro Tymchuk, Coordinator of the Information Resistance Group, in late February 2015, small groups of militants made an effort to expand the area being under their control and conduct offensive operation on the site Marinka-Avdiivka³⁷. Although under the Minsk agreements, heavy weapons should have been withdrawn from the contact line, the town was shelled all this time, from mortars, anti-aircraft guns, heavy machine-guns and armored equipment³⁸. Constant shelling triggered a temporary closure of the Marinka checking point (CP)³⁹.

The shelling intensified in April-May 2015. On May 13, the militants attacked Marinka check-point twice in the effort to acquire it. The Ukrainian troops succeeded in repelling those attacks. Yet 2 weeks later, forcing their way to Kurakhove, the militants shelled Marinka and Pisky from mortars⁴⁰. "This is a direct way to Zaporizhzhia; they need Kurakhove localities as there are mines, and a thermal power station, which can provide them with light and heat. And plus water for a town", Vladyslav 'Varangian', commander of the 2nd howitzer platoon of the 28th brigade, says.

A full-on assault of illegal armed formations against Marinka district started in the morning on June 3, 2015. A day before, the OSCE Special Monitoring Mission (hereinafter, the "SMM") observed movement of a large number of heavy weapons within the DPR's controlled area, to a greater extent, in western direction to the contact line, not far from Marinka⁴¹.

The militants attacked at 4:30 a.m. The strongpoints of Krasnohorivka and Marinka had been shelled for over two hours from heavy artillery. "The enemy used rocket and howitzer artillery of 122 mm, 152 mm and 220 mm – the types of weapons which Russia undertook to withdraw from a demilitarized zone," presidential adviser Yurii Butusov wrote on his Facebook page⁴². The military personnel thereafter observed 2 tactical infantry groups, backed by armored vehicles, which came for a mopping-up operation in the town – the militants' plan was to encircle the town.

Ukrainian defenders had nothing to respond to the shelling from artillery – all heavy artillery, subject to the Minsk agreements, had been withdrawn at least 50 km behind the city back in February 2015. That is why, prior to the arrival of tanks and armored vehicles, the military personnel tried to fire back using the available weapons only. The critical point was reached at approximately 11 a.m., when the General Staff of Ukraine lifted restrictions on the use of heavy artillery (counter battery radar). “The General Staff adds that in response, Ukrainian army, “having warned all the international partners, had to use artillery that had before this been located in the rearward areas as determined by the Minsk Agreements”⁴³. Several hours after the arrival of reinforcement, the military personnel reshaped their forces and launched a counteroffensive. At 15:45 hours the Ukrainian Armed Forces informed mass media that Marinka was under control of Ukrainian troops⁴⁴5.

At approximately 17:00 hours, the members of the illegal armed formations began a new attack on the town, however their effort failed. It took the Ukrainian soldiers an hour and a half to wrest ground from enemy. According to Ruslan Seme- niuk, press officer of the Ukrainian member of the Joint Coordination Center for Ceasefire Moni- toring, as of 19:20 hours, the firefight in Marinka was completely stopped and Ukrainian flag was waving over the town⁴⁶. According to the Memorial Map of the Human Rights Abuse Documenta- tion Center of the Ukrainian Helsinki Human Rights Union (UHHRU), posted on http://memorial- map.org/ map, as a result of combat operations, human losses of Ukraine totaled 4 killed military personnel⁴⁷. Wounded were 39 fighters – most of them were from the 28th Odesa mechanized brigade and the 30th Novohrad-Volynskiyi brigade⁴⁸. Far more serious were the losses incurred by the other side, which, according to different calculations, were approximately 12 killed and 80 wounded people.

As to civilian casualties, there had been 2 civilian deaths, and 5 people had been wounded⁴⁹. The information about damages was recorded by local inhabitants – there had been numerous strikes that hit homes as well as a school, a hospital and a plant, which caused fire⁵⁰.

On June 4-5, the 28th separate mechanized brigade, the 25th Dnipropetrovsk separate airborne brigade, and the 93th Kholodnyi Yar separate mechanized brigade, together with Sich and Kyiv-1 battalions conducted a mopping-up operation in the town. Half of the town was checked with- out a single shot however, near the district po- lice station, the militants put up a good fight. The Ukrainian forces kicked out the militants from there and the town was ultimately liber- ated⁵¹52.

The combat that continued from June 3 to June 5, 2015 became one of the biggest mili- tary actions conducted in Marinka.

The Town of Phantoms

As a result of permanent shelling, in July-August 2014, damaged were residential houses, electricity transmission lines as well as the compound feed meal plant, a dairy, a tire repairing plant, and a filtration station. The town center became a complete ruin. The shells damaged the facilities of the town state administration, post office, dozens of shops and destroyed a local museum⁵³.

The extent of damages caused to the residential houses, infrastructure and public institutions was recorded on a video posted on YouTube by the representatives of the Azov battalion⁵⁴. Smashed-in windows, holes in the walls, tracks of armored vehicles and craters of exploded shells on the roads, and pierced roofs looking like lumps, and mined approaches to the town – this whole mess was facing Marinka's inhabitants after an active phase of the ceased combat operations.

Local residents massively evacuated from the town at that time; everybody who had the opportunity to leave, availed of it. The local population shrank almost twice within a month. Those who remained (largely, the pensioners) informed the press representatives of the power, gas and water supply interruptions or complete absence thereof⁵⁵.

As a result of continuous shelling, the town emptied and became a phantom. The motion only takes place in the morning, when explosions cease and people come downtown to an improvised market. Shops, drugstores and banks are closed⁵⁷. As a result of damages to industrial facilities, the people found themselves without jobs. Some of them have got jobs in neighboring towns, however, the majority lives off pensions and other welfare payments.

The most difficult was the winter season of 2014 – 2015. Shelling did not cease, water, gas and electricity supplies were cut off in the town, which substantially complicated people's living conditions. Repairs were often postponed because of a threat to life of the maintenance team workers⁵⁸. Furthermore, neither public transport nor ATMs were operational.

The quality of life in Marinka decreased every day: a humanitarian crisis started in the city. The population suffered because of starvation and low temperatures in their homes⁵⁹. The problem was not only a lack of money to buy food and pharmaceuticals, but also the fact that they could be rarely found in the town.

"It is difficult to get here; it is difficult to leave this place – this is an area being entirely shelled. As this is an endpoint, there is a last checkpoint here and the Ukrainian soldiers"; volunteer Oleh Tkachenko, assistant pastor, says. The worst situation was observed among the socially vulnerable groups of Marinka's residents⁶⁰. The volunteers and representatives of the civilian and military cooperation organizations took care of their provision with food⁶¹. The humanitarian convoy from the Red Cross was visiting the town every month. In 2015, one drugstore and two shops (a grocery and a household shop) were serving the needs of the whole town⁶².

To keep the civilian population, volunteers, and mass media representatives safe in the tensest situations, there was raised the question of closing the CP. It was the toughest time: the town was turning into trap. As if it were scheduled, shelling began in the afternoon. During such hours, local residents were hiding in the basements, only leaving their shelters when it was absolutely necessary. It appears that there had been no houses in Marinka, which had no shelters for the period of shelling.

According to official data, 41 town dwellers including 2 children perished during the military conflict in Marinka. 57 blocks of flats and 652 private houses were destroyed or partially damaged⁶³. Notwithstanding such range of destruction, the population of this unconquerable town lives in the hope that its infrastructure, administrative and private buildings will be renewed. And having their own bitter experience, they wish peace to the whole Ukraine.

Life in the Grey Zone

Today the town is divided into two zones: ordinary and red. The first one is controlled by the Ukrainian military forces and it is more peaceful there. Step-by-step, the previously existing benefits come back there – a bank branch has started its operations⁶⁴, and electrical grid and gas pipeline undergo repairs. The Ukrainian mobile operators provide, though with interruptions, their communication services. The volunteers under humanitarian projects help the local population to repair their homes⁶⁵. A cultural component is not forgotten in Marinka either: the volunteers conduct concerts and exhibitions there⁶⁶; the town is visited by theaters, and it has even been visited by Ukrainian singer Iryna Fedyshyn⁶⁷. “The main leisure activity here is the youth athletic center... Recently opened was a Youth Center thus, the life acquires colors step-by-step”, local Marinka’s resident Mykola says^{68,69}. However, Russian channels continue to be heard in the town, the Ukrainian ones are only accessible to those who had Internet.

The red zone is restricted for local residents since almost every day its area is shelled from the side of Donetsk. It cannot be accessed by the “humanitarian assistance” missions, ambulances or fire brigades though some civilians remained there (the right to cross the demarcation line between the two zones is vested to them only)⁷⁰.

Notwithstanding the peace talks and agreements, during the full 4 years of the conflict, the town has still remained to be one of the flashpoint areas^{71,72} in the theater of operations.

The war became an everyday occurrence there.

Conclusions

The small town of Marinka has literally been living in the line of fire for 4 full years already. Very little has remained of a formerly prosperous district center with almost a ten thousand population – there are damaged buildings of administrative authorities, schools, a post office and shops. The town became a ruin.

During the peacetime, the industrial Donetsk and agrarian Marinka were separated by sunflower fields and walkways which connected Trudivski of Petrovskyi district with Prokofiev Street, and now, by mined outskirts and a fighting front. Such a neighborhood is the cause of continuous shelling, new casualties among the local population, and the destruction. The fact that Marinka is a part of the “grey zone” practically undermines all the chances of fast town infrastructure and economic renewal.

However, the most valuable treasure remaining in Marinka is its local residents: those who restore the town with their hands, using what they have; those who bake pasties for the Ukrainian soldiers, give food to pensioners and families with many children; those who put on vyshyvankas (traditional Ukrainian embroidered shirt) and teaches the children to love their country and its values; and those who, in spite of everything, wish peace to all the country and live in the hope that someday, peace will anyway come to their home.

Massive shelling of Marinka, which led to numerous fatalities among civilian population of the city, constitutes a war crime in the meaning of Article 8 of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.

Furthermore, the facts that shells were fired on the facilities such as schools, hospitals, a museum, a post office and a town state administration are also treated as the breaches of the provisions of the International Humanitarian Law.

Such shelling that can be referred to as terrorist acts caused multiple destructions and damages of civilians’ homes. Now, submitted to the European Court of Human Rights are the applications of the Ukrainian citizens who became victims of such crimes as there has been a violation of the right to peaceful enjoyment of the possessions as guaranteed by Protocol 1 Article 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.
